Dear Franzcisco,

It sounds like a possibility! If you translate it, Dr. Karpinski and I can see if it has what it takes to make a good comparative article. If this is the case – though I cannot speak for her – I think a co-authored article would be interesting.

Best regards,

paul

Dear Paul,

We want to update you about some facts of our research. We are writing the article, but we attempt to first write it portuguese, you are invited to be our co-author, if you are intersted we can translate everything for you. We pretend to write in english journals after we done with our portuguese article, looking for Computers in Human Behavior or similar journal.

What do you think about comparing results from our data, brazilian students (n=285), with the European and United States one to see if we have differences and similarities. It could bring more bright to our first finds. Our research finds no correlation beetwen SNS usage and GPA.

Again thank you very much for your time,

Francisco,
Guilherme

Professor Paul,

You got the moves, we wasn't expecting that fast reply, which gave us even more enthusiasm. We will totally respect the cc license, and also pretend to use it on our work, we are not in an open university, but we are looking forward on that direction.

We will do our best to attend the quality expectations and we are greatly flattered by your co-authoring offer. Will be great to have such skilled and prestigiated research on our side. Just to contextualizate you, we are on our first master year, we are doing our first research and we are personally intersted in the learning and SWL subject.

Again, we appreciate your quickly answer, if you can provide us any more information for the success of that kind of research we will aprecciatte that too.

We are sincerely grated for your time and effort,

Francisco,

Dear Franzscisco and Guilherme,

Here is the questionnaire. It is Creative Commons – attribution so we expect citations at the least. Depending on the quality of the research we might be willing to co-author if you would appreciate it.

Best regards,

paul

Dear Mr. Kirschner,

We are brazilian researchers at University of São Paulo (USP), Brazil. First we'd like to congratulate you for your incredible work on the impact of technology on learning processes. We are so inspired by your work that we want to replicate the research you made in the United States, and posterior, in Europe, here, in Brazil.

We are looking for your help and assistance to atend the high standards that the best journals demand. We are ready to make our own questionnaire, but we would prefer to continue your research, following the same standards to compare the results, so we are like to ask if you can share with us the survey you used in your research. And if you can share any tips with us we appreciate it too.

Best regards,

Francisco Matelli
